

FINDING YOUR DESTINY

What does that mean - to find your destiny? I think everybody would like find their destiny, but what does it mean "destiny."

Destiny can be defined as the preordained path for your life, but to me that could just be the consequence of your choices, which can bring to pass good or bad experiences. Shouldn't destiny be more of a certain connection to your purpose?

I do believe that all human beings are endowed with a prosperous inheritance guaranteed if they but seek, search and find. In other words, every person is bestowed a gift or an ability special and particular to you. Isn't it obvious as we observe those who have excelled and "awe" us with their exceptional talent, whether they be a great singer, artists or teacher. It is clear that those who have identified their special gift will bless the lives of others with that gift because they have become one with their purpose and are excellent at what they do. To those of us that receive in admiration - it seems so easy to the giver that we often shrink in our own disappointment that we are not as lucky, fortunate or talented as another and wished we were.

The truth of the matter is that we all are given exceptional gifts that will develop, grow and be perfected as we tap into the power and frequency of that energy that expounds and accelerates the special talent we have been gifted.

How then do we recognize our gift and follow through and become excellent? How do we know and how do we rise to a level of mastery? Let me first say that what you are seeking is better defined as fulfillment. Because whatever your purpose is it must be met with the "right" emotion. Some call it passion, but as Jim Rohn says, "passion" is a bit confusing and misleading. Most people know exactly what they want to do – what would be fulfilling in their life, but are blocked because of logic or being realistic, which are illusions and do not exist. When you break the barrier of, so called logic and implement “faith”, which is an intense hope and expectation coupled with effort and trust in the unlit path – the clouds will part and the force will guide you to your purpose.

If you think you are not sure what your purpose is yet. Maybe you do, but have not accepted that it is possible for you. Release yourself from your current logic and consider all things are possible. If you are still uncertain of your purpose – take time to meditate until the thought becomes clear.

Mark Twain said that “the two most important days in your life are the day you were born and the day you figured out why”

May you find your purpose and follow through – become that which you were meant to be
